[The numbers below the names show the number of tithables on each plantation. According to races, the tithables stood 372 white and 52 negroes. Estimating the tithables at one-third of the total population would make Northampton's population in August, 1666, 1,116 white, and 156 negroes—total, 1,272. This was about three years after Accomack county was cut off from Northampton.]

VIRGINIA IN 1636-'8.

HARVEY'S SECOND ADMINISTRATION.

(Abstracts by W. N. Sainsbury, and copies in the McDonald and De Jarnette Papers, Virginia State Library.)

[The papers published in this instalment, which to some extent cover the same period as those in Vol. IX, of this Magazine, treat of Governor Harvey's return to Virginia on January 18, 1636-7; of Lord Baltimore's attempt to obtain control of the colony; of Claiborne's claims to what he deemed his rights in Maryland, and various orders and petitions in regard to tobacco. The Assembly referred to in Harvey's letter of January 27, 1636-7, met, in accordance with his summons, on February 20, 1636-37. In a letter dated January 29, 1637-8, (printed in Virginia Magazine IX, 272), Harvey refers to "the ensuing Assembly," which met (see a letter from Harvey, ib. IX, 409) on February 20, 1637-38. These two Assemblies, which have escaped particular notice, help to fill up the gap which seemed to exist between the sessions of May, 1635, and January, 1639. Virginia, therefore, between the years 1629 and 1640, had annual meetings of its legislature.

It is interesting to compare the history of Virginia from the accession of Charles I to the year 1640, as shown in these extracts from the English public records and other sources, with
